A Clever Satira. In view of the fact that many good men of 'the house of the Lord" are at variance with each other, you will do a favor to many of your readers by giving them Mark Twain's idea on the su'j ot. SPICE. The new Atlantic contains the tale of Edward Mills and George Booton, by Mark Iwain, which is as clover a stire on the sentimentality over crime as that sort of gush has ever recoived. Elward Mills minded from boyhood; George Banton never did. Edward prospered, George always had to be helped. They had the same adopted parents, who left all the property to George because Edward could take care of himself. So it went in all things. Even the gir that Elward was engaged to dropped him, as it was her duty to save George. Hard times threw Edward out of regular work, and he relapsed to common laborer for awhile; but George became a fl urishing drankard. give the last part of the story, leaving it to rea fers of the Atlantic to got the full enjoyment of the whole: A grand temperance revival was got up, and after some rousing speeches had been made, the chairman said impressively: "We are now about to call for signers; and I think there is a spectacle in store for you which not many in this house will be able to view with dry eyes." Phere was an elequent pause, and then George Binton, escorted by a red siehed detachment of the Ladies of the Refuge, stepped forward upon the platform and signed the pledge. The air was rent with applause, and everybody cried ter joy. Everybody wrung the hand of the uew convert when the meeting was over; his salary was enlarged the next day; he was the talk of the town, and its hero. An account of it was rublished. George B nton fell regularly every three months, but was faithfully resound and wrought with every time, and good situations were found for him. Finally he was taken around the country lecturing as a reformed drunkard, and be had great houses and did an immense among of good.

He was so popular at home, and so trustedduring his sobor intervals—that he was enabled to use the name of a principal cicizen, and get a large sum of money at the bank. A mighty pressure was brought to bear to sav the cous querces of his forgery, and it was partially suce s fa!-he was "seat up" for only two years. When, at the end of a year, the tireless efforts of the benevolent were crowned with success, and he emerged from the pecitentiary with a pardon in his picket, the Prisoner's Friend Society met him at the door with a situation and a comfortable salary, and all the other benevolent people came forward and gave him advice, eccouragement and help. Edward Mills had occa applied to the Prisoner's Friend Society for a situation, when in dire need, but the question, "Have you been a prisoner?"

mad brief work of his case. While all these things were going on, Edward Mills had been quietly making head against adversity. He was still poor, but was in receipt of a steady and sufficient salary, as the respected and trusted cashier of a bank. George Benton acver came near him, and was never heard to inquire about him. George got to indulging in long absences from the towa; there were ill-reports about him, but nothing definite.

One winter's night some masked burglars forced their way into the bank, and found Edward Mills there alone. They commanded him to reveal the "combinatior," so that they could get into the sale. He refused. They threat-ened his life. He said his employers trusted him, and he could not be traiter to that trust. He could die if he must, but while he lived he would be faithful. He would not yield up the "combination." The buglars killed him. The detectives hunted down the criminals: the chief one proved to be George Benton. A wide sympathy was felt for the widow and orphane of the dead man, and all the newspapers in the land begged that all the banks in the land would testify their appreciation of the fidelity and heroism of the murdered cashier by coming forward with a generous contribution of money in aid of his family, now boroft of support. The result was a mass of solid cash, amounting to upwards of $500-an average of nearly three-eighths of a cent for each back in the Union. The cashier's own back testified its gratitude by endeavoring to show (but humiliatingly failed in it) that the peerless servant's accounts were not square, and that he himself had knocked his brains out with a bludgeon to escape detec ion and punishment. George Benton was arraigned for trial .-Then everybody seemed to forget the widow and orphans in their solicitude for poor George. Everything that money and inflaence could do was done to save him, but it all failed; he was sentenced to death. Straightway the Governor was besieged with petitions for commutation or pardon; they were brought by tearful young girls; by sorrowful old maids; by deputations of pathetic widows; by shoals of impressive orphans. But no, the Governor for one; would not yield.

Now, George Banton experienced religion.—

The glad news flew all around. From that time forth his cell was always full of girls and women and fresh fi wers; all the day long there was prayer and hymn singing and thanksgiving and homillies and tears, with never an interruption occept an occassional five mimute intermission tor refreshments.

This sort of thing continued up to the very gallows and George Benton went proudly home, in the black cap, before a wailing audience of the sweetest and best that the region could produce. His grave had fresh flowers on it every day for a while, and the headstone bore these words, under a hand pointing sloft: "He has fought the good fight."

The brave cashier's headstone has this inscription: "Be pure, honest, sober, industrious, considered and pure honest and pure ho siderate and you will never-" Nobody knows who gave the order to leave it that way, but it was so given.

The cashier's family are in stringent circumstances now, it is said; but no matter, a lot of appreciative people, who were not willing that an act so brave and true as his should go unrewarded, have collected $42,000—and built a memorial church with it.
